

HEALTHY MOTHERS, HEALTHY BABIES, BETTER COMMUNITIES

BY BETH GRIFFIN

Prenatal care is essential for healthy mothers and their babies, but low-income, uninsured women in many areas have no access to this critical service. Until recently, pregnant women in central Iowa's Story County had to travel 45 miles to Marshalltown or Des Moines for affordable prenatal healthcare. Without transportation or paid leave time, countless expectant mothers simply could not access the services they needed.

Thanks to A Mid-Iowa Organizing Strategy (AMOS), an ecumenical community organization that receives funding from the Catholic Campaign for Human Development (CCHD), women and babies are now served by a fully equipped and professionally staffed mobile obstetric clinic that pulls into a church parking lot in Ames twice a month. Ames, a city of 59,000, is the largest in Story County.

The mobile clinic is the happy result of a five-year effort by AMOS to meet a need often identified by AMOS's 29 member organizations, including Catholic parishes in the Archdiocese of Dubuque and the Diocese of Des Moines. AMOS lead organizer Paul Turner says the clinic, like all the group's projects, started with people telling their stories at "house meetings," where individuals from different backgrounds come together, identify the pressures they face, and form an alternative vision for their community. "The house meetings cross the lines that tend to divide people and create the possibility of hope," says Turner.

In fact, he says, the integrity of the AMOS agenda flows from the house meeting process. They look for solutions for people like Michelle Hernandez, a mother of three, who spoke at one of the house meetings. She described driving an hour to the hospital in Marshalltown while she was in hard labor, only to be turned away because her labor had not progressed enough to deliver the baby. She timed her contractions in the parking lot until she was admitted to the hospital.

FROM THE DIRECTOR

Dear Friends,

He is risen!

Alleluia!

Alleluia!

Like the apostles, we encounter Christ on the way to Pentecost—on the road, in the breaking of bread, and in those who are hurting or wounded.

The Passion and agony of Jesus is still fresh in our minds, and Easter joy can be short lived as we look around and see abject poverty, community desolation, and despair. Christ calls us to be a resurrection people, a people concerned about the hurting, the vulnerable, the child yet to be born—and in that concern to be a people who act to protect and defend life.

A Mid-Iowa Organizing Strategy (AMOS) saves lives by making sure that pregnant mothers have proper prenatal care. AMOS unites communities by bringing together Catholics, health and education advocates, and low-income communities in the hope of raising awareness of birth issues, prenatal health needs, and maternal and child well-being.

Thanks to you and your generous contributions to the Catholic Campaign for Human Development, the work of AMOS and some 240 other groups throughout the country lifts low-income families out of poverty and despair. Your actions are indeed a powerful witness to the saving power of God's love.

Blessings to you and yours,

For the mobile clinic, Turner says AMOS brought together the goodwill and resources of Catholic, public health, and educational institutions, which share a common respect for life. Interns at a county hospital needed experience in obstetrics; Des Moines University had a clinic vehicle; the local Lutheran church had an accommodating parking area; and parishioners from St. Thomas Aquinas Church in Ames worked as bridge builders with AMOS to make it all happen.

He says the mobile clinic looks like a doctor's office on wheels, with exam rooms and an ultrasound machine. Six to ten women are served each time the huge vehicle comes to town, and doctors estimate that as many as 60 women a year will seek prenatal care there because of its proximity and affordability. The clinic does not offer abortions or contraceptives.

Turner says AMOS's efforts also helped influence charity care policies of the major health care systems in Iowa and Catholic hospitals across the country. "People with the least ability to pay were being billed at the highest, undiscounted rates. We helped negotiate a deal with large hospitals to apply a discount to the uninsured, too," he says. "It was the first voluntary agreement of its kind in the United States."

AMOS LEADER AND BOARD MEMBER DORA CAMARGO FROM OUR LADY OF THE AMERICAS CATHOLIC CHURCH IN DES MOINES SPEAKS AT THE ISSUES ASSEMBLY.

Bishop Richard E. Pates of Des Moines says, "In following the work of AMOS, I can detect the hard work in identifying issues, doing the required research, and recommending steps for achieving social justice. AMOS's efforts serve to provide a voice to the voiceless and underrepresented."

Danelda Allen, a member of the Social Justice Committee at St. Thomas Aquinas, says AMOS helps her parish respond to "the least, the last, and the lost—and to remember why we're here."

She explains, "As a parish, we are very good with acts of mercy, but we struggle with acts of justice. AMOS dovetails with Catholic social teaching by addressing systemic injustice issues."

AMOS has received local and national grants from CCHD for its community organizing work. "CCHD support is absolutely critical to the success of AMOS," Turner says. "The local and national grants mean a great deal. They keep the lights on, pay the staff, and underwrite the costs of our organizing efforts."

Archbishop Jerome Hanus of Dubuque lauds AMOS's work as "difficult, but most important," and necessary to fulfill the gospel call to provide service to those in need. "As chief shepherd for the Archdiocese of Dubuque, I am pleased that our Ames parishes are actively involved in the work of AMOS," he says.

Spotlight on Renewal

The recent Catholic Campaign for Human Development (CCHD) Review and Renewal created a new position to focus on promoting, safeguarding, and monitoring the Catholic identity of CCHD. The USCCB Department of Justice, Peace and Human Development's (JPHD) Education & Outreach office partnered with CCHD to restructure existing communications positions, creating the Mission-Identity Outreach Manager position. This position is crucial, as it oversees communication processes for JPHD, with a special emphasis on supporting the implementation of CCHD's Renewal.

Gloria Luna Moorman, former CCHD grants specialist for the southwestern and central regions of the United States, played a crucial role before and during CCHD's Review and Renewal. She demonstrated to the department that she had the talent, energy, and vision necessary for the new position.

Her work in campus ministry in Austin, TX, in faith-based community organizing in Kentucky and Miami, and directing the Office of Social Advocacy for the Archdiocese of Miami prepared Gloria for her new job. "This is an exciting time for JPHD and for CCHD in particular," she said. "The bishops' recommitment to CCHD's mission has affirmed our work. When so much of the country is living in poverty, it is an honor to be able to contribute."

Gloria's career has been influenced by the stark contrasts of being born in El Salvador in the late 1970s and moving to Texas at the age of seven. She holds a BS in public relations from the University of Texas School of Communication and an MA in pastoral ministry from St. Thomas University in Miami Gardens. She has been married to Mark Moorman for two years and attributes her capacity to do the work to her supportive family in Texas.

What Is CCHD?

Through the Catholic Campaign for Human Development (CCHD) of the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB), Catholics and friends of CCHD across the country help poor and low-income Americans to help themselves and their communities out of poverty.

Since 1970, the Catholic Campaign has contributed over $280 million to more than 7,800 low-income-led, community-based projects that strengthen families, create jobs, build affordable housing, fight crime, and improve schools and neighborhoods. CCHD requires that projects develop community leadership and participation so that their solutions to poverty will be long-lasting and effective, and so that CCHD's investment in people will help break the cycle of poverty. CCHD also educates Catholics about the causes of poverty and seeks to build solidarity between impoverished and affluent persons.
